Introduction

This area provides the information on who is this group and what topics or disciplines they cover. This area is to establish the setting.
For instance: The focus of this Working Group is to investigate the chemical processes of the Pacific ocean pelagic zones with an emphasis on mesopelagic biogeochemistry. We are concerned with factors that influences x and y. Our members have expertise in climate change, physical geography, and seafloor geology.

Text here should be approximately 70-90 words.

The Issues

This area is to state what issues this group is addressing. What problems and concerns are group members focused on?

For instance: This group is addressing the far-reaching consequences and impacts that rising ocean temperatures may have on marine life. We know that the warming of oceans triggers feedback loops that can exacerbate the impacts on marine life, yet we know little about the how this…

Text here should be approximately 70-90 words.

Current Work

•The Current Work section is to highlight the actionsof the Working Group, Committee, etc.
•What proposed solutions is this group working toward? To make this information easy to read and digest, provide 3-4 bullet points in concise statements.
•These statements should highlight the current key actions –it is not to provide details on all the activities. Focus on what actions do you want your audience to remember? What stands out about your current work? What makes it unique?
•These actions statements should be understood by wider audiences. Be careful to not use terms that only other committee members would understand.
